

Bloomington Democrats will decide tonight who will fill an empty seat on the city council.

The seat representing District 4 became vacant when Jeffrey Willsey resigned earlier this month.

Either Jim Sherman, a psychology professor at Indiana University, or David Rollo, a research associate with IU's biology department, will be sworn in as the district's new representative. The new member will attend the council's next meeting on Feb. 5.

A caucus of eight precinct committee members from District 4, which covers the southeast side of Bloomington, will vote on the two candidates tonight.

They are Lois Sabo-Skelton, Tim Mayer, Jack Davis, Trudy Marsischky, Iris Kiesling, Dave Toumey, Becky Wann and Jim Register.

While the council districts were redrawn last year, the precinct committee members "represent the district as it stood when Jeffrey was elected," said Regina Moore, city clerk.

Willsey, who had one year left in his term, attended his last meeting Jan. 15. In a resignation announcement, Willsey said "my two small children need and deserve my full-time attention at this time."
