Volan asked if there had been only four approvals since the Ordinance 21-23 passed.

Council questions:

Scanlan confirmed that was correct.

Rollo asked if staff only learned of violations based on neighbor complaints.

Scanlan said the goal was to catch potential violations during the permit phase, but complaints could be submitted by residents.

Rollo asked what the penalty was.

Scanlan said illegal land use cost $2500 per day, per violation, until the illegal use stopped.

Volan asked if there had been any illegally built plexes because he had heard that there were.

for an Additional Five Years [7:28pm]

Rollo moved and Sandberg seconded that Resolution 23-18 be adopted.

De de la Rosa, Assistant Director of Small Business Development, Economic and Sustainable Development (ESD) department, presented the Bloomington Urban Enterprise Zone (BUEZ) including its history, members, and responsibilities of the Bloomington Urban Enterprise Association (BUEA). She discussed the extensions of the zone over time, impacts, incentives, state code, and grants for the zone.

Volan asked how much money was invested in the zone in the last year and over the lifetime of the zone.

Council questions:

De la Rosa said it was close to $150,000. She was not sure about the lifetime amount because record-keeping from years past was not clear.

There was discussion regarding the money being used in the zone.

Rosenbarger thanked de la Rosa for her work. She noted the vacant resident zone seat on the BUEA.

De la Rosa confirmed the vacancy and explained the requirements for the seat.

Piedmont-Smith and Rosenbarger noted that they each lived in the zone and disclosed that they were eligible for a tax break for their work for the city. They believed that they could impartially participate in the consideration of Resolution 23-18.

Piedmont-Smith asked for clarification on how funding was received from the BUEA.

De la Rosa explained that the primary source was the Enterprise Zone Incentive Deduction. Businesses paid 20% of what their tax would have been, each year. The city invested that money back into the community.

Resolution 23-18 (cont'd)

Piedmont-Smith asked if businesses were exempt from their tax bill.

Council questions:

De la Rosa stated they were not and there were incremental options. For some businesses it was a straight tax deduction, and for others there was a schedule and they could have a lesser deduction at the end of the timeline.

Sims thanked de la Rosa and asked Piedmont-Smith and Rosenbarger if they had used the tax incentive. He asked how the extensions worked.

Piedmont-Smith stated that she did.

De la Rosa said that it was in five year periods, and could be done in perpetuity at the time.

There was no public comment.

Public comment:

Volan commented on the zone's grants and referenced the Community Revitalization Enhancement District (CRED). The administration had not made significant efforts to spend that funding specifically in the districts. He lamented that the CRED funds were not spent while the districts existed.
